STUDY TECHNICAL BACKGROUND

This report describes the results of a national telephone survey of 1,000 adults completed under the direction of Stanley Greenberg of Greenberg-Lake, Inc., and Fred Steeper of Market Strategies, Inc.

Interviews were conducted between June 23 and July 1, 1991, by professional interviewers working from Data Stat, Inc., in Ann Arbor, Michigan. The interviews were administered using a computer-assisted telephone interviewing program (CATI). The average length of interview was approximately 27 minutes. Data Stat conducted extensive pre-testing of the survey before beginning the interviewing. Four call-backs were conducted on multiple evenings on numbers that had a busy signal, or an answering machine, or no answer. Approximately 15% of the calls were monitored by a supervisor.

Respondents were chosen from among all households in the contiguous 48 states on the basis of random probability sampling procedures which took into account unlisted telephone numbers. The sample was stratified according to census regions, states within census regions, and counties within states. Interviewers observed gender quotas so that 52 percent of the sample is comprised of women and 48 percent is comprised of men.

The sample was checked against census estimates for the Voting Age Population (1990), and previous survey results. A number of questions were half-sampled, and each sample was weighted separately. The two half-samples were found to have small discrepancies by race and age, and were weighted to census estimates. The weighted N for the total sample is one thousand (1,000).

The margin of error for this survey when analyzing results from the entire 1000 respondent sample is plus or minus 3.1 points. Thus, if 53 percent of the respondents in this sample believe that the country is "off on the wrong track", it is very likely (95 times out of 100) that the percentage for the entire population would fall between 49.9 percent and 56.1 percent. The sampling error for subgroups smaller than 1000 is somewhat larger according to the size of the subgroup being examined.

The principal investigator for this survey was Stanley Greenberg. All questions and the analysis in the report were approved for fairness, balance and accuracy by Greenberg-Lake, Market Strategies, and Americans Talk Issues.

As stated in the final report, the sample was slightly skewed by age and race within split sample. The following SPSS commands were used to create the WEIGHT (WT) variable:

set list = 'weight.res'.
