AMERICANS TALK ISSUES #17: HIGHLIGHTS OF POLL RESULTS

From a national telephone survey of 1,000 adults. Conducted Nov. 25 - Dec. 2 by pollsters Fred Steeper and Stanley Greenberg for the Americans Talk Issues Foundation, Alan F. Kay, president. Statistical margin of error on questions asked of the full sample is 3.2% (or 4.5% for half-sample questions where noted, 6.3% for quarter samples).

COLD WAR/JAPAN: Asked to choose whether the United States or Japan won the Cold War, 24 percent say Japan versus 42 percent who think the U.S. is the winner. Sixteen percent volunteered the opinion that no one won, and five percent volunteered that the Cold War isn't yet over. Ten percent are undecided. (Q5, page 2)

SOVIET DISINTEGRATION: Asked how much of a threat the Soviet Union is to the United States these days, 75 percent of all Americans feel it poses a minor threat or no threat at all to the United States. This continues the downward trend of previous ATI surveys. (Half sample QAB3, p. 1)

- As for the emerging Soviet republics, 76 percent see them as a minor threat or no threat at all, versus 20 percent who see them as a serious or very serious threat to the United States. (Half sample QCD3, p. 2)

- Asked why Soviet leaders cut back on Soviet global expansionism, 63 percent choose "the Soviet economy is so weak that they need to reduce their military spending," over 16 percent who choose "Soviet leaders really want to reduce the risk of war," and 15 percent for "President Reagan's military buildup forced them to the bargaining table." (Q6, p. 3) By 46 to 38 percent, however, they believe the U.S. military buildup of the '80s speeded Communism's decline. (Q7, p. 3)

GULF WAR: Eighty-two percent of Americans think that the U.S. and its allies should have continued fighting in Iraq until Saddam Hussein and his government were forced out of office. (Q11, p. 4)

- Seventy-three percent of Americans feel the United States and its allies did the right thing by starting the war against Iraq, versus 23 percent who feel we should have stayed out of it. (Q8, p. 4)

- Sixty-five percent of Americans think the war was a "great victory" for the United States, down from 85 percent who thought so in March. (Q9, p. 4)

MIDDLE EAST: Sixty-six percent of Americans say they would like to see the U.S. keep a permanent force in the Middle East, like we did in Germany and Korea, versus 28 percent who think we should not keep such a force. (Q14, p. 5)

UNITED NATIONS ROLE: [NOTE CHANGE IN CONCLUSIONS FROM PRELIMINARY ANALYSIS] Depending on how the question is worded, 38 to 50 percent of Americans would favor giving U.N. resolutions the force of law over the laws of individual countries, including the United States, when necessary to fulfill vital U.N. functions. This is down from 59 percent in ATI #16, taken in late June. (Half samples QAB57 and QCD57, p. 17)

- The poll asked followup questions of those initially supporting giving U.N. resolutions the force of law. Two-thirds to three-quarters of them (a minority of the overall population) would support possible U.N. resolutions such as a proposal for worldwide nuclear disarmament, an anti-terrorism tax on international air travel and a limit on the size of all nations' armies. (Half samples QAB58-65 and QCD58-65, pp. 18-19)

- The only potential U.N. resolution that fails among Americans initially willing to give U.N. resolutions the force of law is one that would prohibit any country, including the U.S., from using the death penalty for any crime. Three-quarters of them oppose that. (Half samples QAB62 and QCD62, p. 18)

- Overall United Nations approval is up to 78 percent, from 66 percent in June 1991. (Q46, p. 14) Also, a 51 percent majority says the U.S. "should abide by all World Court decisions, even when they go against us," up from 42 percent in May 1988. (Q55, p. 16)

NUCLEAR DISARMAMENT: Of the Americans willing to give U.N. resolutions the force of law, about two-thirds (a minority of the overall population) would support a U.N. resolution requiring all countries with nuclear weapons to destroy them in a balanced and verifiable manner under U.N. supervision. More than half of them (a minority of the overall population) would support a U.N. resolution with the force of law to limit the size of all nations' militaries, including the U.S.'s. (QAB58 and QCD58, p. 18)

- Trust that the Soviet Union or the republics emerging from it will keep their end of a nuclear arms reduction agreement has reached a high point of 44 percent (up from 17 percent in a 1982 L.A. Times poll), but a slight plurality of all Americans still feel that neither can be trusted. (QAB4 and QCD4, p. 2)

PRESIDENTIAL RACE: Americans say they would vote for a democratic Presidential candidate running on a domestic issues platform over Republican incumbent George Bush by more than 20 points, 54 percent to 31 percent. However Bush maintains a 12-point lead over a generic Democratic challenger and a 4-point advantage over a hypothetical Democrat running on a platform of international cooperation to solve global problems. (Quarter samples QA70, QB70, QC70, QD70, pp. 21-22)

RIGHT DIRECTION/WRONG TRACK: Within forty-eight hours after the air war in Iraq started, the number of Americans who thought the country was moving in the right direction leaped 30 percent, to 56 percent. (ATI #15) Now, only 24 percent say the country is moving in the right direction --- below even the pre-war figures. (Q1, p. 1)

■ More than two thirds of Americans feel the nation is seriously off track. In contrast, only 43 percent feel the world as a whole is off track, while 46 percent feel the world is moving in the right direction. (Q2, p. 1)

THIRD WORLD DICTATORS: Americans perceive a persistent potential threat from Third-World dictators. Between 84 and 92 percent favor the U.S. and U.N. taking clear action to stop a hypothetical dictator who sponsors terrorism; obtains nuclear, chemical or biological weapons; violates human rights, including torturing and murdering subjects; invades and occupies a neighboring country; or engages in a major arms buildup. (Quarter samples QA24-30, pp. 7-8) Results are slightly lower when specific dictators are paired with hypothetical actions. (pp. 10-13)

■ Seventy-three percent of Americans approve of ranking the dictators from bad to worse, then targeting the top one or two for the U.S. and U.N. to stop, as examples to other dictators. Americans also approve of two other plans to stop dictators by slightly lower margins. (Q43-45, p. 14)

INTERNATIONAL TRADE: People familiar with the concept of "globalization" think it is a positive thing by a 5-1 margin, although 85 percent feel that the inability of groups like the World Bank and GATT (the General Agreement on Trades and Tariffs) to keep up with the rapid growth of globalization is a very serious or a somewhat serious problem. (Q15, p. 5)

■ Nearly half (49 percent) of Americans feel the U.S. should seek international agreements to strictly limit international companies' locating their factories in countries with cheap labor. (Q19, p. 6)

■ Seventy percent of Americans support strict international regulation of arms sales from industrialized nations to Third World countries building their own military capabilities. (Q22, p. 7)

ENVIRONMENT: Seventy-eight percent of Americans think the U.S. should seek international agreements for the strict regulation of pollution carried across borders by wind and water, like factory smoke from France and Germany that causes "acid rain" in Scandinavia and radioactivity spreading over Europe from Chernobyl. (Q21, p. 6)

■ Of the Americans willing to give U.N. resolutions the force of law, more than two-thirds (a minority of the overall population) would favor one that bans the logging of ancient forests, including those in the United States. (Q60, p. 18)

THE AMERICANS TALK ISSUES FOUNDATION (ATIF)

907 6th St SW #602C, Washington DC 20024 ■ 202-488-5889 or 202-223-6767

Americans Talk Issues Foundation supports bipartisan policy issue survey research for Congress and for national policy organizations which are expert in the public's interest in an issue and which wish to become more expert in the public's opinions, values, and judgments in that issue. ATIF is an outgrowth of the Americans Talk Security (ATS) project which has been conducting high quality telephone surveys covering national and international security since 1987.

The president of ATIF, Alan F. Kay, was inspired to create this new organization based on many years of experience with commissioning and developing both political and market surveys. The inspiration grew from the gradual accumulation of ever more convincing evidence that the position of the public on policy issues could be uncovered by the diligent labor of a small group of professionals --- expert in an issue and representative of various viewpoints on that issue --- conducting a series of surveys in a common endeavor to determine the public's in-depth view of that issue.

Alan F. Kay has found that as the data accumulating with each additional survey is analyzed, the public view which emerges ever more clearly and substantively turns out to have a number of striking and important features. It is remarkably self-consistent; it exhibits common sense and collective wisdom; it is sometimes complex and sophisticated; it changes in response to major events that supply new information but otherwise it is extremely resistant to changing; it often reveals strong majority support for policy positions NOT recognized as worthy of consideration by --- and NOT the same as the positions or opinions expressed by --- any national political leaders of either party or by any widely recognized news reporters, editors, or commentators.

One important qualifier to these general conclusions is that since it is indeed true that the public's understanding of the facts as revealed in opinion research is often abysmally poor, this view of the public that we seek will only fully emerge if the expert design team includes in the surveys and in the questions themselves sufficient factual information so that the public has a basis for the values, judgments, and opinions that it expresses. Due to the limitations of telephone interviewing, the factual information must, of course, be very brief. To the extent that the facts included in the questions are not understandable to the public, or not adequate, fair, balanced, or accurate or to the extent that the menu choices offered to the public in the response sets do not cover an adequate range of choices, this conclusion will be impaired and the process of uncovering the majority view that is sought can fail.

To the extent that the process succeeds, what is uncovered is not a snapshot of mass opinion; it is what public judgment on a policy issue would be if the entire public were informed by brief, relevant, understandable, fair, adequate, balanced and accurate information. Although this may be public opinion only in a special sense, the value of understanding this version of public opinion to decision makers is potentially enormous. Policy makers, for example, will discover which bits of information about particular choices prove most persuasive and important to help identify new areas of potential consensus. ATIF is dedicated to seeking and promulgating this understanding and the process which produces it.

QUARTER SAMPLE A

My next question concerns some of the dictators in the world...
(QUARTER SAMPLE A - generic dictators)

From time to time the behavior of dictators, like Manuel Noriega [MAN-WELL NOR-EE-A-GA] in Panama and Saddam Hussein [SAW-DAM WHO-SANE] in Iraq, threatens U.S. and international security. Here are some actions a dictator might take. For each one, please tell me if you agree or disagree that the United States and the United Nations should take clear action to stop it. (IF AGREE/DISAGRE, ASK) Would that be strongly or somewhat (agree/disagree)?

Q67. Under the current system of one-country one-vote in the 166 member United Nations, a resolution can pass by majority vote even if the countries which vote AGAINST it have most of the world's population and most of the world's economy. This strikes some people as unfair to the larger and more important members, like the U.S. Do you think the current one-country one-vote system in the U.N. is or is not fair?

QAB68. Some people want to make voting in the U.N. both more fair and more effective. They have suggested that if the general assembly of the U.N. passed a resolution to implement one of its responsibilities, that the resolution should become law, enforceable by economic sanctions and peacekeeping forces, provided three things are true about the vote: (1) the countries that voted for the resolution represented a majority of the members, AND (2) had a majority of the world's population, AND (3) paid a majority of the U.N.'s expenses. With those stipulations, do you think U.N. resolutions should or should not have THE FORCE OF LAW over the actions and laws of individual countries, including the U.S.?

Q69. Member nations are assessed dues by the U.N. according to the size of their economies. Currently, the U.S. with the largest economy, is assessed 23 percent of the total U.N. dues. Because of disputes between the U.N. and the Reagan administration over U.N. procedures, the U.S. held back paying its dues and now owes 500 million dollars in back dues while all the other 165 member nations owe less than 300 million dollars. The old disputes are now over, and President Bush has pledged to pay back the owed dues over 5 years. Do you think the U.S. should pay all its arrears now or pay them back over 5 years?
