1991 GSS

The 1991 General Social Survey (GSS) is an in-person, full-probability sample of adults living in households in the United States. There were 1,517 cases and a response rate of 78%. The survey was conducted by the National Opinion Research Center (NORC), University of Chicago, under the direction of James A. Davis, Harvard University, and Tom W. Smith, NORC/University of Chicago. Full technical details are given in Davis and Smith, 1991; 1992.

Basic support for the GSS comes from the National Science Foundation. Also, in 1991 United Way of America, Andrew Greeley, and the Rockefeller Foundation provided additional support.

1992 GSS

In 1992 NORC attempted to locate and reinterview all 1,517 respondents to the 1991 GSS. Interviews were completed with 84% or 1,273 of the 1991 GSS respondents. 1,041 were reinterviewed by mail and 232 by telephone.

Of the 244 nonrespondents 115 could not be located, 100 refused, 20 were unable to respond for other reasons (e.g. physically or mentally incapable of answering questions), 8 were deceased, and 1 was unavailable.

Panel Mortality

The table below compares the attributes of those who were reinterviewed (1,273) to the original 1991 GSS respondents (1,517).

Attributes	1991 GSS	Reinterviews	Prob.(a)
% Female	55.8	55.6	.639
% Big Central City	20.8	20.4	.456
% Age, 18-29	20.1	19.1	.163
% Employed	58.3	58.9	.329
% Protestant	63.0	63.3	.481
% Never Married	21.4	21.0	.210
% Couple with Kids	25.3	25.8	.180
% Less than High School	20.1	17.8	.000
% Income below $12,500	21.2	19.4	.000
% Black	13.4	12.3	.003
% Cooperative	75.1	78.1	.000
		(1,517)	(1,273)

(a)The probability tests whether the reinterviews differ significantly from the 1991 GSS respondents. The test compares how respondents and nonrespondents differed in the whole distributions (e.g. all age groups and educational levels). Only one category for each variable (e.g. those 18-29) is displayed above.

The Probability column tests whether the reinterviews significantly differed from all 1991 GSS respondents. On most demographics (sex, marital status, household type, community type, employment status, age, and religion) there are no statistically significant differences between respondents and non-respondents. That is, the reinterviews are representative of the initial respondents.

However, on two dimensions respondents and non-respondents do differ. First, respondents are more up-scale. Fewer have less than a high school education or a family income below $12,500. Also, Blacks are underrepresented. However, a multivariate analysis of non-response shows that race is not actually related to non-response. Blacks are less represented only because they tend to be less educated and poorer. Second, non-response is higher among those rated as less cooperative at the time of the initial interview. This means that the reinterviews slightly overrepresent better educated and higher income respondents and those rated by interviewers as cooperative. (The multivariate analysis indicates that SES and cooperation are independently related to response. See Smith, 1993.)

Weighting

To adjust for the differential response a weighting variable (EDINCWT1) was created based on education and family income. This weight compensates for the underrepresentation of the less educated and lower income respondents in the 1992 reinterview. While this weight does not seem to change results very much, researchers should consider using it to help make the 1992 reinterview a representative sample of the US adult population. Since the 1991-1991 reinterview file contains all 1,517 of the original 1991 respondents, it is possible to carry out ones own analysis of non-response.

Analysts may also wish to use a weight based on number of adults in the household in 1991 (ADULTS). This weighting factor is explained in Appendix A of Davis and Smith (1991).

Documentation

This codebook provides information on 1) the location and name of all variables in the 1991-1992 file (Appendix 1: Data Locations), 2) the wording of variables asked on the 1992 reinterview and the location of the wording of the variables asked on the 1991 interview (Appendix 3: Question Wordings), and 3) the relationship of variables asked in 1991 to those asked in 1992 (Appendix 4: Comparison of 1991 and 1992 Variables). In each of these appendices the key to cross-references is the standard GSS variable name as assigned in the SPSS system file.

Please note that Appendix 2: Data Distributions (freqencies of all variables in the 1991-1992 file) is not included in this machine-

Appendix 1: Data Locations

The first column lists the name of all variables in the file. The second and third columns list respectively the starting and ending positions for each of these variables.

Appendix 2: Question Wordings

Variables on the 1991-1992 reinterview file consist of questions that were asked on a) the initial 1991 survey and b) the 1992 reinterview. For purposes of documentation the 1991 questions fall into two groups. First, the wordings and descriptions for the questions in columns 1-831 (ID to OVERSAMP) appear in the 1972-1991 codebook (Davis and Smith, 1991). Second, wordings and descriptions for the questions in columns 832-968 (RELATE1 to SPSEI) appear in the 1972-1991 codebook supplement (Davis and Smith, 1992).
The 1992 reinterview questions appear in columns 969-1249 (OPWLTH to EDINCWT1). The wording of these items is given in this appendix. The mnemonic name for each variable appears alongside the question wording (e.g. VAR: OPWLTH). In columns 969-1193 (OPWLTH to LESSEQ) are variables that appear only on the 1992 reinterview. They consist of the 1992 International Social Survey Program module on social inequality. In columns 1194-1242 (PROFTS11 to RINCM911) are questions repeated from the 1991 survey. Appendix 4 compares the 1991 and 1992 variables. In columns 1243-1249 are two special variables. REINT (column 1243) denotes whether or not the 1991 respondent completed the 1992 reinterview. EDINCWT1 (columns 1244-1249) is a weighting variable designed to compensate for non-response bias in the 1992 reinterview (see discussion above).

Appendix 4: Comparison of 1991 and 1992 Variables

Certain variables asked on the 1992 survey are repetitions of identical items asked in 1991. These are found in columns 1194-1242. This appendix lists in the first column the variable name as asked in 1991, in the second column the variable name when asked in 1992, and in the last pair of columns the column positions of the variables. For those questions with a temporal specification (e.g. last year) the reference naturally changes and the 1991 questions and 1992 questions refer to different time periods.
