Methodology

June 2012 Voter Attitude Survey

Prepared by Princeton Survey Research Associates International for the Pew Research Center for the People & the Press

June 2012

SUMMARY

The June 2012 Voter Attitude Survey, sponsored by the Pew Research Center, obtained telephone interviews with a nationally representative sample of 2,013 adults living in the United States. Interviews were conducted via landline (n_{LL}=1,127) and cell phone (n_C=886; including 455 without a landline phone). The survey was conducted by Princeton Survey Research Associates International. The interviews were administered in English and Spanish by Princeton Data Source from June 7 to June 17, 2012. Statistical results are weighted to correct known demographic discrepancies. The margin of sampling error for the complete set of weighted data is ±2.6 percentage points.

Details on the design, execution and analysis of the survey are discussed below.

DESIGN AND DATA COLLECTION PROCEDURES

Sample Design

Interviews were conducted using a combination of RDD landline, RDD cell and callback samples. A total of 1,127 interviews were completed with respondents contacted by landline telephone and 886 with those contacted on their cellular phone. Four separate sample segments were used for data collection in order to obtain a representative sample while oversampling 18-29 year-olds.

Table 1. Sample Segments

Segment	Sample Type	Population	n=
1	Landline RDD	All adults	1,082
2	Cell RDD	All adults	719
3	Landline callback for 18-29	18-29	45
4	Cell callback for 18-29	18-29	167

Sample segment 1 consists of landline random digit dial (RDD) samples drawn using standard listed-assisted methods, where telephone numbers were drawn with equal probabilities from all active blocks (area code + exchange + two-digit block number) in the United States. The cellular sample used for segment 2 was not list-assisted, but was drawn through a systematic sampling from dedicated wireless 100-blocks and shared service 100-blocks with no directory-listed landline numbers.

The landline and cell callback samples used for segments 3-4 were drawn from recent PSRAI surveys and included people who were ages 18-29 at the time of the initial interview.

Questionnaire Development and Testing

The questionnaire was developed by the Pew Research Center. In order to improve the quality of the data, the questionnaire was pretested with a small number of respondents using RDD landline sample. The monitored pretest interviews were conducted using experienced interviewers who could best judge the quality of the answers given and the degree to which respondents understood the questions. Some final changes were made to the questionnaire based on the monitored pretest interviews.

Contact Procedures

Interviews were conducted from June 7 to June 17, 2012. As many as 7 attempts were made to contact every sampled telephone number. Sample was released for interviewing in replicates, which are representative subsamples of the larger sample. Using replicates to control the release of sample ensures that complete call procedures are followed for the entire sample. Calls were staggered over times of day and days of the week to maximize the chance of making contact with potential respondents. Interviewing was spread as evenly as possible across the days in field. Each telephone number was called at least one time during the day in an attempt to complete an interview.

The introduction and screening procedures differed depending on the sample segment. For each contacted household in sample segment 1, interviewers asked to speak with either the youngest adult male or youngest adult female currently at home based on a random rotation. If no male/female was available at the time of the call, interviewers asked to speak with the youngest adult of the opposite sex. This systematic respondent selection technique has been shown to produce samples that closely mirror the population in terms of age and gender when combined with cell sample.

Sample segment 2 included interviews with all adults on cell phones. This segment was administered a standard cell phone screener which simply confirmed that the person was an adult and in a safe place to talk before continuing with the main interview.

A wording experiment was imbedded into the introduction for sample segments 1 and 2. To one random half-sample the survey was described as a "telephone opinion survey for leading newspapers and TV stations around the country" while for the other half-sample the survey was described as a "study about some important issues today and would like to include your household."

For callback sample segments 3, interviewers started by asking to talk with the person in the household who had previously completed a telephone interview. The person was identified by age and gender. After the target respondent was on the phone, they were administered the age screener before continuing with the main interview. Callback cell sample segment 4 was administered the age screener before continuing with the main interview.

All cellular respondents were offered a post-paid cash reimbursement for their participation.

WEIGHTING AND ANALYSIS

Weighting is generally used in survey analysis to adjust for effects of the sample design and to compensate for patterns of nonresponse that might bias results. The weighting was accomplished in several stages to account for the different sample segments as well as the oversampling of 18-29 year-olds. Weighting also balanced sample demographic distributions to match known population parameters.

The first-stage weight is the product of two different adjustments that were made to the different sample segments. These adjustments are summarized in the following table.

Table 2. Adjustments made in the First-Stage Weight

Variable name	Description
OSADJUST	Adjustment to account for oversampling of 18-29 year-olds in segments 3 and 4
PUPSA	Phone Use/Probability of Selection Adjustment. Corrects for [a] overlapping cell and landline sample frames and [b] different probabilities of within household selection based on the number of eligible household members

This first-stage weight (WT1) was used as an input weight for the demographic raking. The data was raked by form to current population parameters for: sex by age; sex by education; age by education; race/ethnicity; census region; population density and household telephone usage.

The telephone usage parameter was derived from an analysis of recently available National Health Interview Survey data[1]. The population density parameter is county-based and was derived from Census 2000 data. All other weighting parameters were derived from the Census Bureau's 2011 Annual Social and Economic Supplement (ASEC).

This stage of weighting, which incorporated each respondent's first-stage weight, was accomplished using Sample Balancing, a special iterative sample weighting program that simultaneously balances the distributions of all variables using a statistical technique called the Deming Algorithm. The raking corrects for differential non-response that is related to particular demographic characteristics of the sample. This weight ensures that the demographic characteristics of the sample closely approximate the demographic characteristics of the population. Table 3 compares weighted and unweighted sample demographics to population parameters.

Effects of Sample Design on Statistical Inference

Post-data collection statistical adjustments require analysis procedures that reflect departures from simple random sampling. PSRAI calculates the effects of these design features so that an appropriate adjustment can be incorporated into tests of statistical significance when using these data. The so-called "design effect" or deff represents the loss in statistical efficiency that results from systematic non-response. The total sample design effect for this survey is 1.40.

PSRAI calculates the composite design effect for a sample of size n, with each case having a weight, w_i as:

$$deff = \frac{n\sum_{i=1}^{n} w_i^2}{\left(\sum_{i=1}^{n} w_i\right)^2} \qquad \textit{formula 1}$$

In a wide range of situations, the adjusted standard error of a statistic should be calculated by multiplying the usual formula by the square root of the design effect ($\sqrt{deff}$). Thus, the formula for computing the 95% confidence interval around a percentage is:

where $\hat{p}$ is the sample estimate and n is the unweighted number of sample cases in the group being considered.

The survey's margin of error is the largest 95% confidence interval for any estimated proportion based on the total sample— the one around 50%. For example, the margin of error for the entire sample is ±2.6 percentage points. This means that in 95 out every 100 samples drawn using the same methodology, estimated proportions based on the entire sample will be no more than 2.6 percentage points away from their true values in the population. The margin of error for estimates based on form 1 or form 2 respondents is ±3.7 percentage points. It is important to remember that sampling is only one possible source of error in a survey estimate. Other sources, such as respondent selection bias, questionnaire wording and reporting inaccuracy, may contribute additional error of greater or lesser magnitude. Table 4 shows design effects and margins of error for key subgroups.

Table 4: Design Effects and Margins of Sampling Error

	Sample Size	Design Effect	Margin of Error
