November 2012

SUMMARY

The November 2012 Post-Election Survey, sponsored by the Pew Research Center for the People and the Press, obtained telephone interviews with 1,206 people who voted in the general election. The interviews were conducted in English and Spanish by Princeton Data Source, LLC from November 8-11, 2012. Statistical results are weighted to correct known demographic discrepancies. The margin of sampling error for the complete set of weighted data is ±3.4 percentage points.

Details on the design, execution and analysis of the survey are discussed below.

DESIGN AND DATA COLLECTION PROCEDURES

Sample Design

Sample for this survey was collected from Pew's Election Weekend Survey. All registered voters from both the land line and cell samples were eligible for this callback survey. Sample for the original surveys was drawn using standard list-assisted random digit dialing (RDD) methodologies. While a total of 1,258 registered voters was recontacted, only those who said they voted in the election (n=1,206) were kept in the dataset for analysis.

Contact Procedures

Interviews were conducted from November 8-11, 2012. As many as 7 attempts were made to contact every sampled telephone number. Sample was released for interviewing in replicates, which are representative subsamples of the larger sample. Using replicates to control the release of sample ensures that complete call procedures are followed for the entire sample. Interviews were conducted with the person who completed the Election Weekend interview.

Calls were staggered over times of day and days of the week to maximize the chance of making contact with potential respondents. Each number received at least one daytime call in an attempt to find someone at home.

WEIGHTING AND ANALYSIS

Weighting is generally used in survey analysis to compensate for patterns of nonresponse that might bias results. Two stages of weighting were performed on the data. The weight from the final Election Weekend dataset was used as a first-stage weight for this project. This first-stage weight corrects for different probabilities of selection and differential non-response associated with the Election Weekend sample. The interviewed sample of all registered voters was then raked - by form - to match parameters for sex, age, education, race, Hispanic origin, region, population density and telephone use. These parameters came from the weighted demographics of registered voters interviewed for the Election Weekend survey from which sample was drawn. In addition, a parameter was added to the weighting so that the vote results reported in the survey matched the actual popular vote results. Table 1 compares weighted and unweighted sample distributions to population parameters.

Weighting was accomplished using Sample Balancing, a special iterative sample weighting program that simultaneously balances the distributions of all variables using a statistical technique called the Deming Algorithm. Weights were trimmed to prevent individual interviews from having too much influence on the final results. The use of these weights in statistical analysis ensures that the demographic characteristics of the sample closely approximate the demographic characteristics of the target population.

Effects of Sample Design on Statistical Inference

Post-data collection statistical adjustments require analysis procedures that reflect departures from simple random sampling. PSRAI calculates the effects of these design features so that an appropriate adjustment can be incorporated into tests of statistical significance when using these data. The so-called "design effect" or deff represents the loss in statistical efficiency that results from systematic non-response. The total sample design effect for the 1,258 re-contacted voters is 1.49.

PSRAI calculates the composite design effect for a sample of size n, with each case having a weight, w_i as:

$$deff = \frac{n\sum_{i=1}^{n} w_i^2}{\left(\sum_{i=1}^{n} w_i\right)^2} \qquad \textit{formula 1}$$

In a wide range of situations, the adjusted standard error of a statistic should be calculated by multiplying the usual formula by the square root of the design effect ($\sqrt{deff}$). Thus, the formula for computing the 95% confidence interval around a percentage is:

where $\hat{p}$ is the sample estimate and n is the unweighted number of sample cases in the group being considered.

The survey's margin of error is the largest 95% confidence interval for any estimated proportion based on the total sample— the one around 50%. For example, the margin of error for the entire sample is ±3.4 percentage points. This means that in 95 out every 100 samples drawn using the same methodology, estimated proportions based on the entire sample will be no more than 3.4 percentage points away from their true values in that population. The margin of error for estimates based on form 1 or form 2 respondents is ±4.9 percentage points. It is important to remember that sampling fluctuations are only one possible source of error in a survey estimate. Other sources, such as respondent selection bias, questionnaire wording and reporting inaccuracy, may contribute additional error of greater or lesser magnitude.

RESPONSE RATE

Table 2 reports the disposition of all sampled telephone numbers ever dialed from the original callback sample. The response rate estimates the fraction of all eligible respondents in the sample that were ultimately interviewed. Response rates are computed based on AAPOR response rate 3 definitions. The response rate for both the landline and cell sample was 41 percent.[1]
